Apparent Depth

perspective per - spek - tiv
n 1: the science of painting or drawing so that objects represented have apparent depth and distance 2: the aspect in which a subject or its parts are mentally viewed;
esp: a view of things (as objects or events) in their true relationship or relative importance where you stand.

As a memory book, Lucky Bag can portray the Naval Academy from the inside looking out, or from the outside looking in.

The Big Picture

Some experiences, all midshipmen understand. But can we ever recognize The Big Picture?
Or do we just see parts of the whole?

Relative Importance

Much of the time,
it seems, we are wrapped up in our own worlds.
But once in a while, we catch a glimpse of something much bigger than ourselves.

Individual Aspects

Lucky Bag cannot catch all the important moments, for they are different for each individual.
This memory book, though,
aspires to record
different perspectives
of the Naval Academy.

THE YEAR

THE YEAR IN REVIEW . . .

Midn X and Midn Y were in the yearbook office, reminiscing about The Year.

Midn X: Hey, remember when we used to get all those honor bulletins? They always used our names, and it really made me mad. I was afraid we might be getting a reputation.

Midn Y: I remember. Those were the good old days. USNA. They gave up the bulletins when they ran out of letters. But you're off the track already. You're supposed to be reminiscing about THE YEAR. You know, OUR year, this year, when we were first class, leaders of men and women, responsible, in control . . .

Midn X: In control of what? The first thing I remember about being a first class is getting a thirty-minute lecture on where I couldn't park.

Midn Y: You must be thinking of the changes neccesitated by the building of the Dave Robinson Memorial Basketball Arena . . . I mean, the Brigade Activities Center. Look on the bright side, though; at least we were all allowed to park in the Yard. According to Rumor Control Central, anyone with an OOM in the bottom two hundred would have had to park at the Stadium.

Midn X: At 1825 on Sunday, Hospital Point seemed just as far away as the Stadium. I guess it was all right, though. The dash back to the Hall gave us a chance to practice for the New and Improved Mile-and-A-Little-Bit-More.

Midn Y: Right. And while you were parking on Hospital Point, you got a chance to look over the New and Improved (Safer!) Obstacle Course. You know, I heard someone was killed on the O-Course.

Midn X: That was just an out-of-control rumor, Y. Speaking of Rumor Control Central — there were some pretty good stories floating around about former SECNAV Webb's much anticipated USNA visit.

Midn Y: I heard a couple of those. According to one rumor, Mr. Webb was going to come to the Academy and give us a Forrestal Lecture during exam week.

Midn X: That wasn't a rumor, Y. That really happened. I was talking about the crazy idea that '90 would have a Two for Nine Night. Or the even more amusing story that an alpha code had been found on one of those "women's undergarments" — you know, the ones that were found hanging in trees on the morning of his "change of command" ceremony. Now that could have made his speech really interesting.

Midn Y: Even so, we hung — get it? — on his every word, and responded joyously to the news that all summer training would henceforth last eight weeks instead of four.

Midn X: At least the firsties responded joyously. I wonder how the Training Officer responded.

Midn Y: Oh, didn't you hear? There wasn't a Training Officer this year. It was all done by computers.

Midn X: Was it the same computer that conceived the idea of RUN AIDS, RUN SANTACLAUS, RUN EASTER, and other various holidays and diseases?

Midn Y: I think you're exaggerating, X. Anyway, the Academy wasn't really run by computers, you know. There were people behind those computers. Rumor had it that The Man behind the machine was LT Kachmarik.

Midn X: It must be true. That man single-handedly prevented my Mail Directory from migrating for a whole year.

Midn Y: And, in spite of all his advice, we still went out and drank green beer on Saint Patrick's Day.

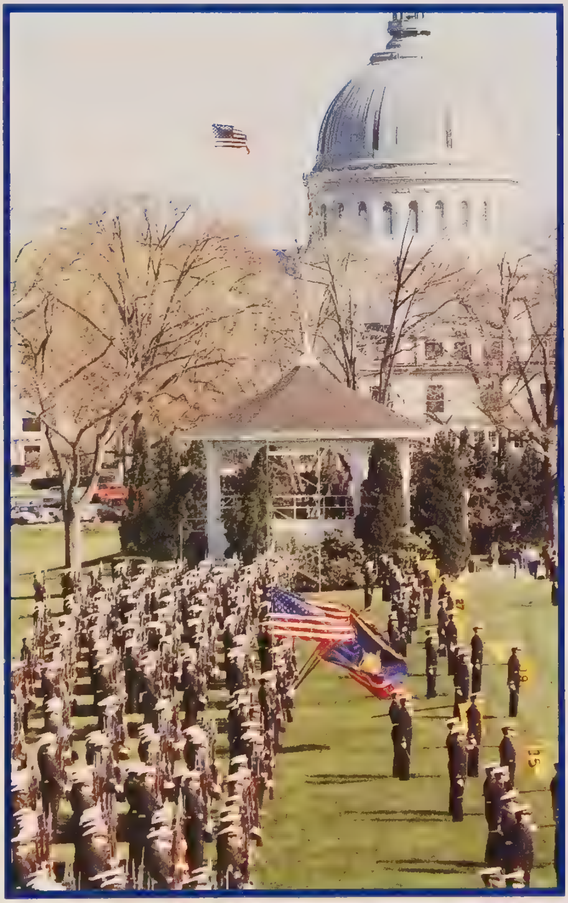
Midn X: You know, we had a lot of people around to give us advice. For example, take CAPT Shupp. Please. Ha Ha.

Midn Y: Yes, I remember the Drill God — he advised me that if I took a knee on the parade field, he would remove my tonsils with his thumb and forefinger.

Midn X: He wasn't totally unreasonable, Y. Sure, he didn't want us to take a knee — but he didn't mind if we took a face. Always remember Shuppology #7 (?), "Work hard and don't take a knee."

Midn Y: Words to live by. But I have to admit, whenever I think of all the valuable advice that I've received, my mind starts to wander . . . back to . . .

Midn X: Oh, no . . . not way back to . . .



PLEBE YEAR?

Midn Y: Yep. Plebe year. The infamous quote of the century, here at USNA: "Suck it up and go with it, 'cause that's the way it's gonna be" — MIDN/CAPT Butler.

Midn X: Those were the good old days. We got our first taste of what the Naval Academy would be like on I-Day, when we were obediently signing all the forms they put in front of us. We were told, "By the way, one of those papers you're autographing says that you agree that your commitment will be five years active and three years in the reserves, instead of the two years that we told you before." Psych!

Midn Y: That was just the first of many changes that we would see over our years at the Academy. When I talk about our plebe year, I tend to start with, "Do you remember when . . . ?" For example, DYRW we had to pick up our uniforms at the Press Shop, and the "Brigade Services Mall" opened in October?

Midn X: DYRW The Laundry People made us write our alpha codes on all four corners of our sheets and bedspreads? DYRW we didn't have to wear a nametag on liberty uniforms, and women wore real ties with WUB "A" instead of "wings"?

Midn Y: DYRW Mr. Pep drew moans and cheers from the Brigade, but in either case refused to be ignored? "Have you got that spirit — yeah, yeah . . ." DYRW midshipmen (besides plebes) actually attended pep rallies and had a good time? DYRW we had to do over 300 push-ups at the Princeton game? Now those were really the good old days — when we excitedly summarized a football game for our upperclass, and they said, "Nap?! Nap?! is that what you call him?! Do you rate that?"

Midn X: Our plebe year was the last year that plebes didn't have mandatory breakfast, and upperclass didn't have reveille. Firsties had liberty every afternoon, second class had Wednesday libs, and reg PE gear was something that only plebes and really weird youngsters wore.

Midn Y: But things weren't all rosy for the upperclass. When we threw our company commanders in the Severn after the last parade, they got fried — breaking ranks, or something like that. RHIR.

Midn X: And firsties who stayed in the Hall while they were on weekend had to go to formation (were supposed to go to formation) on Saturday mornings.

Midn Y: The reasoning behind the rule was, "Bancroft Hall is just like a ship, and if you were on a ship, you wouldn't ever be able to sleep through reveille."

Midn X: Army-Navy, '85 — as plebes, we were allowed to "jump ship" and stay overnight in Philly. It was the last year, officially, that plebes were allowed to change shoulderboards with firsties.

Midn Y: We were supposed to be reviewing The Year. How did we get all the way back to plebedom?

Midn X: I think we were talking about memorable quotes. Hey, I've got one. Who said, "If you don't like it, quit! They're still taking applications at the University of Maryland"?

Midn Y: Too easy. It was the one, the only, CAPT K. — aka Captain Al, the plebers pal. The speech that you're referring to will live forever in the hearts and minds of all members of the Class of 1988. I wish I had a complete transcript. As it is, I can only remember general impressions . . .

Midn X: I know what you mean. When I think of it, I remember bits and pieces, like "faggy stuffy things," "pansies," and "we don't have to apologize for anything we do."

YOUNGSTER YEAR

Midn Y: Yep, that speech really capped off the year well. It was the year of Carl Beve, Jr.

Midn X: Talk about rumors! I heard some real winners about him. Who was he, anyway? Did he have anything to do with Sandra Day O'Connor?

Midn Y: No, I don't think so. Must have been another rumor. But some events were more substantial — for instance, the demise of Midshipmen Held Publications. We all mourned the MHP's loss, until we figured out that it would mean more weekends, and more civilian clothes privileges.

Midn X: The civvies regs were definitely twisted. Old rules: weekends in uniform, but when departing on and returning from leave, civilian clothes were allowed. New rules: civvies were allowed on weekends, but for leave, we had to be in uniform. Why? "In the Fleet, you always report to your duty station in uniform." What?

Midn Y: Whatever. Under the "New Rules," the Dant's List was defined to replace the company officers' list. Newly privileged mids received standardized bennies.

Midn X: But there were some bonuses that we all received. Like, for example, our official Torpedo 'Em penlights. Did we really pay five dollars for those things? I still have mine. I figure it'll be a collector's item someday.

Midn Y: One of the biggest events of the year was Hurricane Gloria — the "gloriafied" rainstorm that cancelled Friday classes and sent firsties to the sea wall to rescue drowning cars.

Midn X: As youngsters, we drove POV's to Army, which didn't seem like such a big deal until we were second class and had to take the bus. In fact, if we're talking long-term effects, Hurricane Gloria couldn't hold a candle to CAPT K.'s infamous speech.

SECOND CLASS YEAR

Midn Y: The New and Improved Rules That Didn't Have To Be Apologized For began to rear their ugly heads second class summer. During the long, hot weeks of PROTRAMID, our evening liberty was curtailed so that we could participate in a mandatory study hour. Study hour? For NS300T?

Midn X: Actually, study hour wasn't always enforced. Exceptions were made whenever CAPT Shupp felt the urge to practice for the change-of-command ceremonies.

Midn Y: During summer training, Group 10 blew holes in the theory that "they can't fry us all." Other Groups who sat through the "stressful" lecture were sympathetic.

Midn X: Later, the "can't fry us all" theory was to be further tested at the '86 Army-Navy game. Some of us wondered if, by the time they were through yanking people out of ranks, there would be anyone left to march on the field.

Midn Y: It shouldn't have surprised us, though. The first semester of our second class year should have been warning enough of which way the tide was flowing. After all, we did spend a whole year of Saturday mornings attending widely appreciated SSIP lectures.

Midn X: When we weren't attending mandatory lectures, we were in reg PE gear, getting our rooms inspection-ready. In Fourth Batt., to be extra-professional, mids field-tested a new no-sleeping-in-the-afternoon rule. That policy crashed like ... like a midshipman in the afternoon.

Midn Y: The administration decided that mids weren't responsible enough to ride bicycles, but if they would have let us ride bikes to Baltimore, we might have made it to the Notre Dame game in time for the kick-off.

Midn X: It took almost as long to get to the Notre Dame game as it did to re-brick Stribling Walk.

Midn Y: No, it didn't take that long. By the time they finished re-bricking Stribling Walk, they were nearly done with whatever they were doing with Mahan Hall.

Midn X: I don't know; that scaffolding was up there for an awfully long time.

Midn Y: It was up there for almost as long as we've been rambling along, trying unsuccessfully to stick to our topic.

Midn X: Which was?

Midn Y: The Year, in Review.

Later, ENS X and ENS Y continued their rambling, feeling, as alumni, even more sentimental about The Institution. Their final words could only be fully appreciated by other members of the Class of 1988.

ENS X: Remember Friday noon personnel inspections every week? Filet mignon? Bagels on Wednesdays and Sundays?

ENS Y: Remember when the label on the peanut butter said "Skippy" instead of "King Hall"? Remember the "Spring Crack" during second class year? (Wasn't long enough to be a Break.)

ENS X: Remember when two strategically placed "snow days" (four weeks apart) enabled us to miss two EE tests?

ENS Y: Remember when . . . they served Doritos with Mexican Meal . . .

ENS X: But that was a long time ago. And definitely off the subject at hand. What were talking about?

THE YEAR IN REVIEW . . .

PLEBES!

I-Day.

— "Name?"

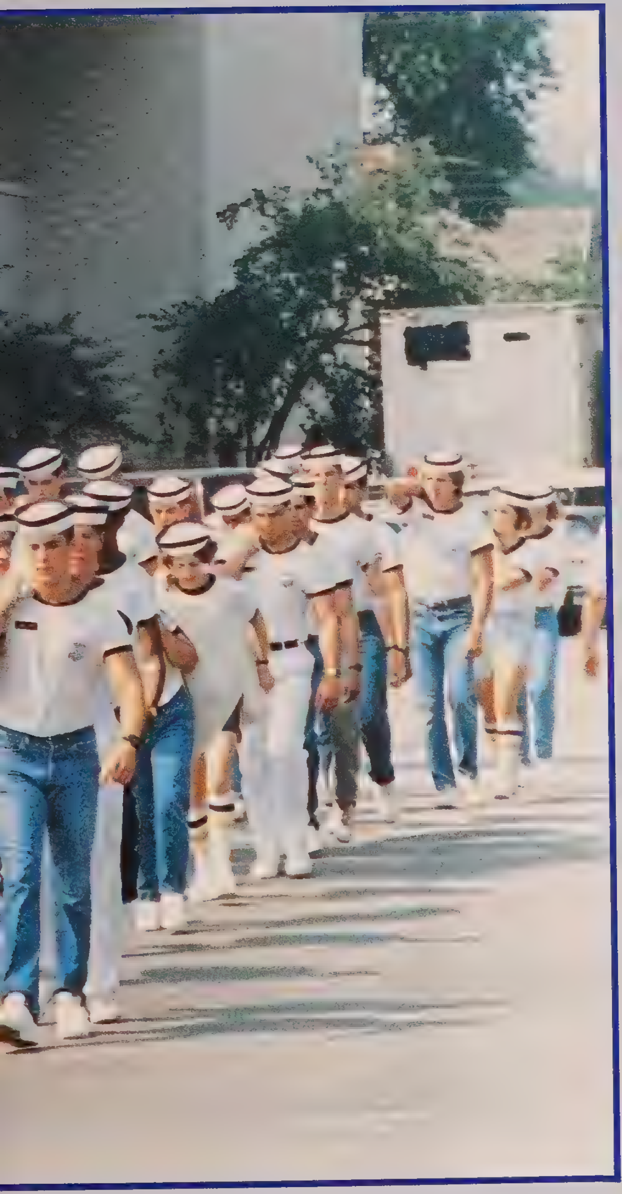
— "Joe Civilian."

— "You're in Golf Company, Twenty-First Platoon. Are you ready?"

— "Yes, sir!"

— "Go right through those doors."

"Right through those doors," new members of the Class of 1991 found six weeks of grueling regimentation. Just as a hundred and forty-two classes had done before, '91 underwent a dramatic metamorphosis from civilian to midshipman — by way of Plebe Summer. Before the Swearing-In Ceremony, all seemed well — left-face, right-face, wear your cover two fingers from the bridge of your nose. Not too bad. But, alas, after a long hot day, the plebes said goodbye to Mom and Dad and hello to . . . "Plebe Halt! Why aren't you chopping?!" Chopping??? "Get those knees up. Move, move, move!!!" When the next day began, the rest of Plebe Summer blurred into pools of sweat and hours of yelling. PEP, sports lectures (aaah, tennis — in an air-conditioned room), drill, uniform races, Commandant's time, personal time (personal what?), validation tests, and SIP's (S--- In Pants) . . . they were long, long weeks for the Class of 1991.



PLEBE DETAIL

Plebe Summer . . . AGAIN! This time, upperclass midshipmen saw things from the other side. Charged with transforming '91 from long-haired civilians to clean-cut, sharp midshipmen, the Class of '88, assisted by a few of '89, at last put into practice what three years of leadership training had instilled in them. Secretary Webb resurrected the requirement for plebes to be braced at all times, thus '88 had to enforce something that they themselves did not have to do. Using Squad Leader Instruction Periods, each first class had the opportunity to offer his or her own philosophy on what it meant to be a midshipman and a naval officer.

Everyone knew that plebe summer was intensely difficult for the new fourth class, but for the first and second class, the journey was just as treacherous, albeit in different aspects. Taps was at 2215 for the plebes; however, the firsties stayed awake a few more hours to evaluate the day and prepare for the next. Even so, reveille still went at 0500. The upperclass on plebe detail were totally responsible for at least thirteen people. By summer's end, '91 was prepared to enter the Brigade as followers, and '88 was ready to lead.

SUMMER CRUISES

Final exams were over, Herndon had been climbed, and the hats had been tossed in the air. The stage was set for summer cruises to begin. For the newly striped third class, cruise spelled freedom at last — and a chance to get a taste of the "real Navy." Some were sent to the Med and WestPac to visit exotic ports while others took the Greyhounds of the Severn to the Great Lakes. Sailtramid offered the adventures of riding the waves of the Atlantic to Bermuda. There was nothing like being on a boat with ten people who hadn't showered for three or more days.

The second class were by far the luckiest of all during the summer months, for they were given the opportunity to excel for eight weeks of Actramid/Protramid. Actramid was a "fry trap," but Protramid had Pensacola which offered the most liberty time. Thus the six days spent there were often hailed as "a good time" even if the T-34 flight on the morning after was a bit uncomfortable. Meanwhile, the firsties were off acting as junior officers on ships around the world. The seas weren't safe with middies at the con of an LST or FFG, but the ProDev Department took the risk in training Midshipmen "to excel in the fleet."

RETURN OF THE BRIGADE

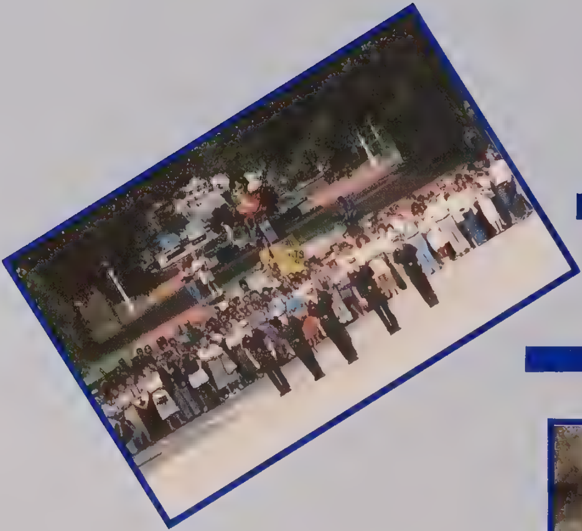
No one looked forward to the Return of the Brigade — except for maybe the second class, whose butane breath was getting too hot to handle. Of course, '91 feared for their lives — they were under the delusion that '89 was going to make them miserable. The second class did their best to uphold the reputation that preceded them, but they didn't have a plebe year of their own to use as a reference.

Perhaps the biggest nuisance of the beginning of the year was moving back into rooms. The mere thought of opening basement lockers sent chills of fear down the spines of unorganized mids. The first room inspection annoyed all, especially plebes, because every upperclass on deck needed to borrow a mop, wax, Brasso, or Windex. Besides that, first impressions from inspection can be the difference between being seen as sqared away or needing to be squared away. Book issue was a good time — we all enjoyed waiting in line and carrying books that seemed to weigh a hundred and fifty pounds. After a few days of briefs and Commandant's Calls, Superintendent's Calls, Brigade Commander's Calls, etc., academics began at full force. Plebes wandered about the yard searching for their classrooms.

2-FOR-7 NIGHT

After a long summer of ACTRAMID/PROTRAMID, the new second class midshipmen return with the Brigade to face an important, to say the least, decision — whether or not to commit themselves to seven more years in the U.S. Navy or Marine Corps. (For those aspiring to be Naval Aviators, the commitment is longer.) Two-for-Seven was dreaded by those who were indecisive and doubtful, but the Class of '89 handled it well. Snacks and beverages, including a few kegs, were provided for '89 to celebrate, or mourn, the commitment.

The only actual signing that took place was when each "segundo" requisitioned a pewter mug as a memento of the night he or she "signed his or her life away." Two-for-Seven Night also gave the second class the chance to gather and regroup before they all faced the latter half of their Naval Academy careers. Once committed, classmate loyalty and support became even more vital. After Two-for-Seven, "cooperate to graduate" was no longer a mere phrase but rather words to live by.



PARENTS' WEEKEND

For three days the Class of '88 got to show off the education and training they had absorbed during the last three years. The firsties greeted their folks with the traditional close march — "Hi, Mom, Hi, Dad" — at outside noon meal formation. Stripers demonstrated precision movements with swords that, although commonplace to Mids, parents never tire of seeing, especially when their kid is wielding it. Then after their sons and daughters nourished themselves, the parents were treated to a visit to afternoon classes, maybe NL400 (glad you could sleep off that jetlag, heh, Dad). If their Mid was fortunate enough to have a youngster, a trip to the Midstore to buy another sweatshirt might be in order. (Gee, Mom, don't you have enough? No, I don't think my fifth cousin once removed wants one.) Friday events winded up with a dinner in King Hall, and the weekend really began, as Midshipmen and parents escaped the Academy to spend some quality time together. Thanks, Mom and Dad, for making us who we are today.

WELCOME

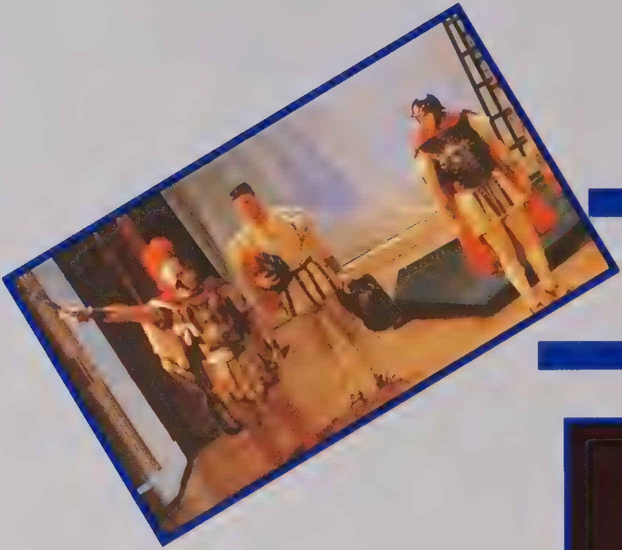
FOOTBALL SPIRIT

Pep rallies ... spell outs ... sheet posters ... push-ups ... spirit recons ... march-overs. All of these bring back memories of Navy football spirit. Bolstered by the motivated Class of '91, Brigade enthusiasm ran high. Football bets between plebes and upperclass caused much uproarious activity in T-Court on the Mondays after games. Although the results of the games were sometimes disappointing, the mids, ever faithful to the Blue and Gold, remained dedicated to the team. The close loss to Air Force was an especially exciting game. Army, of course, was the climax of the year — the Brigade traveled to Philadelphia to cheer Navy on.

TAILGATERS

Tailgaters after Navy football games are as traditional as marchovers and the hat trick. No matter what the outcome of the game, mids and other spectators found something to celebrate. The parking lot came alive. The air filled with the smell of hamburgers and hotdogs on the grill, the sounds of laughter, and the feeling of comraderie.

Whether the 'gater was sponsored by a grad, parents, an ECA, or a company, a good time was had by all who attended. But don't forget to be out of the parking lot by the time it gets dark — or face the wrath of roving patrols with Form-Twos in their breast pockets. Go Navy!



JULIUS CAESAR

"To be, or not to be?" was not the question the Masqueraders were trying to answer in their fall play, but rather it was, "Would my friends really stab me in the back?" Yes, the thespians performed William Shakespeare's historical drama, Julius Caesar. The good acting and lavish costumes made the play a spectacle to watch and the large crowds made it a joy to perform. From the opening lines to "Et tu, Brutu?" those in the crowd who had never seen the play were on the edge of their seats, and those who had were just as captivated, in a way that only Shakespeare can captivate. As for the mids in the audience, not only were they able to see a fine production, and perhaps chalk up some extra credit in a class or two, but those special Friday night libs were hard to beat.

HALLOWEEN

On October 31, uniform standards went out the windows of Bancroft Hall as the Brigade tossed aside their SDB's and dressed up for a Halloween celebration. Ghosts, goblins, witches, warlocks, and other oddities appeared, along with the usual assortment of King Hall workers and transvestites. One could even find a pair of bi-planes circling the Yard, and there were rumors of giant raisins on the rampage.

Aside from the need to break free from WUB"A," there was another reason for the more outlandish costumes. Midshipman were competing for the honor of being judged to have the best costume in the Brigade, and more importantly, the cash prize that went with that recognition. Each company selected their representative for the Brigade costume contest at formation, and then they headed down to a quiet and peaceful King Hall, where the jockeying immediately began for a seat in milk carton range of the fool who chose to dress up in his best sport coat and tie. After dinner and the traditional food fight, everybody headed out to T-Court for the pep rally and the finals of the costume contest.

PLEBE MIXER

After four months of social deprivation even mandatory fun is, well, not unenjoyable. The Plebe Mixer for '91 was actually a pretty good deal even if just to let loose and hear loud music — any music. Some plebes were even lucky enough to have their girlfriends or boyfriends make the trip to Disco Dahlgren. For the guys, merely talking to a civilian girl and smelling her perfume was enough to make the afternoon worthwhile, whether they danced or not. For the young ladies who were invited from the Annapolis area, meeting a midshipmen to spend some time with was a memory worth keeping. Many plebes partook in two alternatives to dancing: reading, or more importantly, sleeping. A few even played a guessing game, trying to identify the state flags, only to realize two hours later, that not only were the flags labeled on the wall, but also that they were in alphabetical order. At least it passed the time.

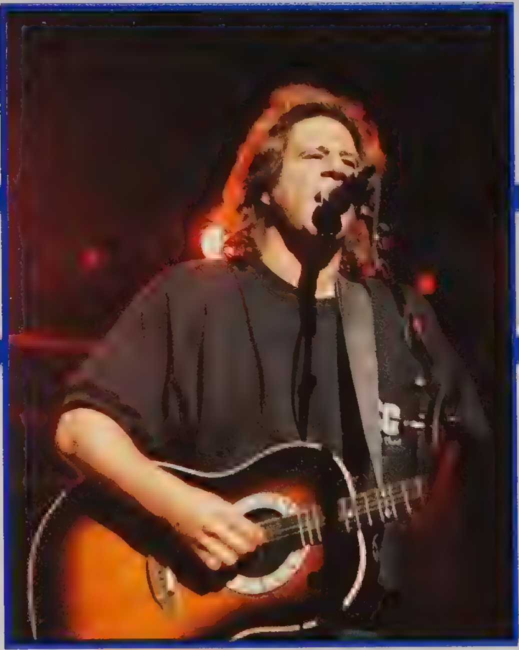
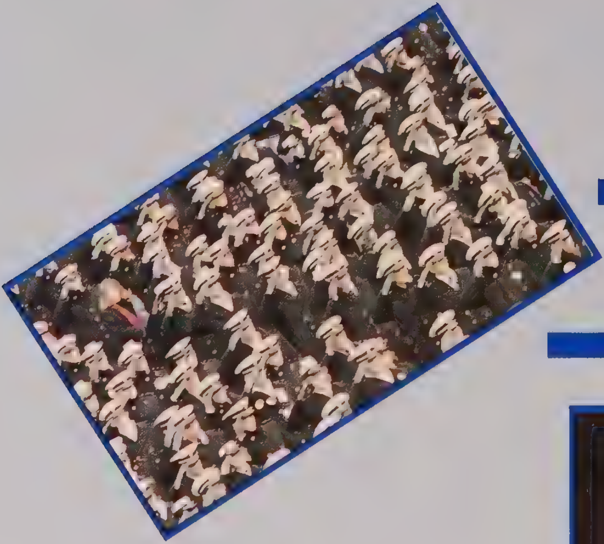
LISA LISA

One enthusiastic midshipman put it this way: "She didn't just put on a concert — she put on a concert for the mids!" Sporting a black spandex miniskirt, white leather boots, and long flashy earrings, Lisa Lisa performed with the Cult Jam to put on a spectacular show for midshipmen and their guests in Halsey Field House. Making a stop at Navy during her Spanish Fly tour, Lisa Lisa provided a chance to cut loose and a welcome break from the academic routine for those members of the Brigade who attended. Even though the midshipmen were disappointed when Expose cancelled, the concert was deemed an overwhelming success. The Brigade Social Affairs Committee and the Modern Music Committee hoped to attract more big name bands in coming years.



NL303 MESS NIGHT

NL303 Mess Night, sponsored by the Division of Professional Development, provided an opportunity for second class midshipmen to sharpen their social graces while rubbing elbows with high-ranking officials. It also gave the King Hall staff another chance to display their culinary skills. While the menu left something to be desired, the company was both stimulating and intimidating. Both fall and spring mess nights attracted top brass from the both the U.S. Armed Forces and foreign services.



ARMY-NAVY

Once again Army Week hit Annapolis with all the fun one football game could muster. Preliminary rumbles and shaving cream fights started on Sunday night after everyone returned from Thanksgiving break. Many tried to get in a final night of studies, as it was also exam week, but it would be the last night for any semblance of study in the hall. Army Week was about to reach flank speed, with spontaneous (?) pep rallies, the car bash, BEATARMY quizzes, rumbles, room trashings, and more food fights than the 'Dant knew what to do with. (He finally ended up saturating King Hall with company officers and BOOW's with orders to fry the slightest offender.) The Thursday night bonfire and pep rally were a huge success as it signaled the end of the preliminaries and the beginning of the real thing: The Big Game.

Bright and early (too early) Saturday morning, more than eighty busses rolled out of the Yard and headed for the City of Brotherly Love. Upon arrival there was the wait for the orders to move out and march on, and then the call to storm the bleachers. Then, finally, the moment the Brigade had been waiting for all week — the kickoff. The cheering was a constant roar right down to the final seconds, and then it was over — Army had won. The final score, though, did not stop mids from "celebrating." They headed for South Street, drowned their sorrows, and told everyone who asked, and some who didn't — "Just wait 'til next year."

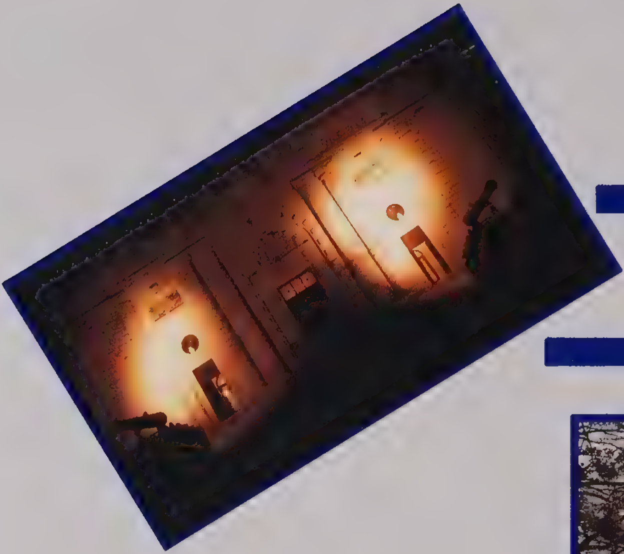
CHRISTMAS FORMAL

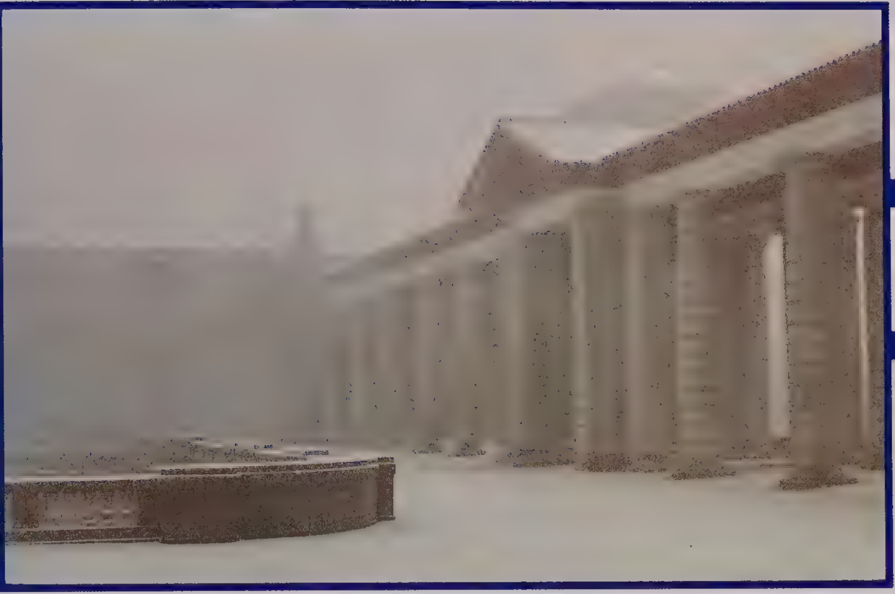
The Christmas Formal, put on by the Brigade Social Affairs Committee, provided midshipmen with an opportunity to dress up in dinner dress blues and strut the town with a grease drag. Swaying under the soft romantic lights of Dahlgren Hall with their dates, the mids enjoyed a last opportunity to escape from the pressures of the Hall before finals. One mid commented, "I probably should be studying — I'm unsat. But my girlfriend is from Annapolis and this was my last chance to take her out before I go home for Christmas."



DARK AGES

Gone were the lazy, hazy days of summer where wine, women, and song were paramount. Gone was the crisp autumn weather for Saturday morning marchovers and great Navy Football. The Brigade entered the post-Christmas blues when time seemed to stand still and spring break was but a fantasy. It was the time of the year when two minutes seemed to last an hour and fourth period EE lasted an eternity.

Enter the Dark Ages, the true test of a midshipman's sanity. The plebes sensed it, too, and they were indoctrinated into yet another Navy tradition. Their exuberance of first semester was replaced by a will to simply survive — like most of the Brigade. With bowed heads and slumped shoulders, mids tried to ward off the chill Severn River wind. The freezing winter weather, though, seemed to reach the very depths of mids' souls. The Dark Ages — there was one positive note: because of the darkness of the long winter season, midshipmen truly appreciated the coming of spring.



SNOW DAYS

The only relief from the Dark Ages was a thick blanket of snow from Mother Nature — thick enough, of course, to cancel classes. Six N's were cancelled, chemistry labs were sadly missed, and the rack beckoned. Plebes revelled in rack time vice come-arounds and nobody cared about anything. Restrictees found more than the usual joy in snow days, because shovelling for one hour meant one less day of restriction to serve. What's a little manual labor for two more weekends?

Whenever the snow threaten to upset the daily routine, Rumor Control Central went wild with such upsetting stories as mandatory study halls even if the instructor was absent. Yeah, right — "Section leader, take charge." Although most of Bancroft Hall slept, some warriors braved the blizzard to engage in battle. Snowballs flew along carefully thought out trajectories to make contact with foreheads and noses. Those prospective spectators who dared to open a window ran the risk of becoming casualties, but all was fair in fun and snow.

THE KING AND I

The Glee Club chose "The King and I" for their annual musical performance. The Rodgers and Hammerstein story focused on a charming English schoolteacher taming the King of Siam. This musical has enchanted audiences since its premiere many years ago, and this performance was no exception. Toaale Mulitauaopele played the role of the King, a part the legendary Yul Brenner made famous. Collen McFeeley played the school teacher whose decidedly assiduous mannerisms succeeded in guiding a stubborn king towards a modern culture. The large audiences enjoyed "the King and I" and its trademark songs, music, and spectacular costumes.

FORRESTAL LECTURES

In honor of former Secretary of Defense James Forrestal, the "Bore-Us-All" Lecture Series was intended to enhance the education and perceptions of the Brigade in the social, political, and cultural arenas of the nation and world. The first lecture was preceded by ugly rumors that '90's commitment was going to be changed to 2 for 9, and that women were going to be shipped off to "a school all by themselves." But alas, the Honorable James Webb, SECNAV, arrived and dispelled these falsehoods. He did, however, announce the reinstatement of the old mission of the Academy, to be indicative of his intention to impose more stringent training, e.g. Bulldog and a minimum eight weeks of summer training. By the way, did anyone ever claim the "woman's undergarment" the Secretary brought with him???

Prior to Dr. Ballard's visit there was no speculation on what he would reveal to us about his search for the Titantic, but once he announced the movie, the Brigade rejoiced. Surprisingly, many were intrigued enough to stay awake to see pictures taken in the darkness of the ocean floor.

SERVICE SELECTION

January 21, 1988 will live always in the memories of the Class of '88. On that night they made decisions that would dictate the course of each of their careers in the Armed Forces — Service Selection. For those at the top of the class, the evening was a happy one, during which they made their choices official. For others, however, waiting in line and watching the TV monitor meant biting nails and sweating it out to see who would get the last pilot, the last NFO, the last Crypto, and even the last Marine Corps billet.

Surprisingly, the Marine Corps billets ran out early, and the last hundred or so selectees found choices of Surface Warfare, Surface Warfare, or Surface Warfare. Some used the long wait to play the odds on a coin to make their choice for them. Overall, most first class expressed a sense of utter relief afterwards, because at last they knew what they would be doing after graduation. But after all was said and done, many still wondered if they had lived up to their class motto, "To Thine Own Self Be True," and made the right choice. In any case, the button to push was . . .COAST.

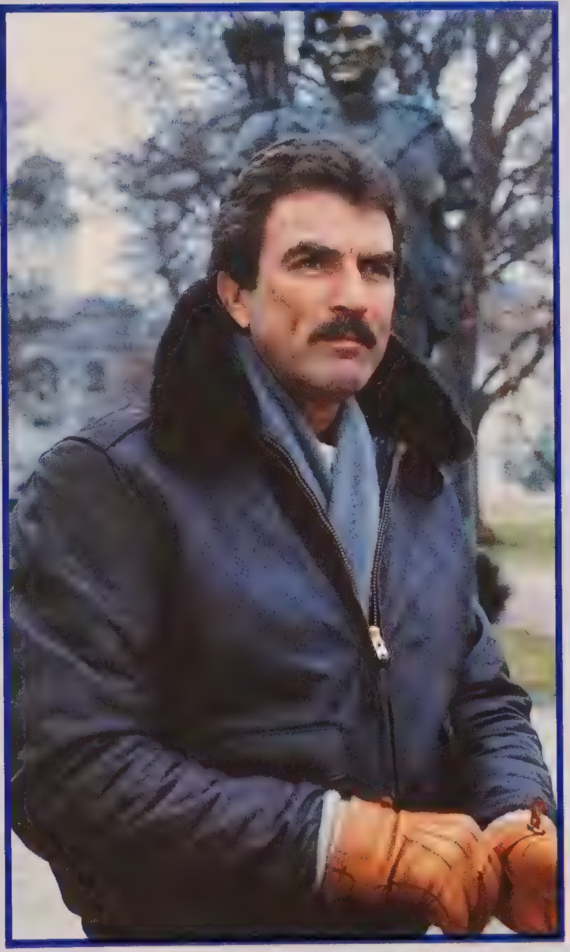
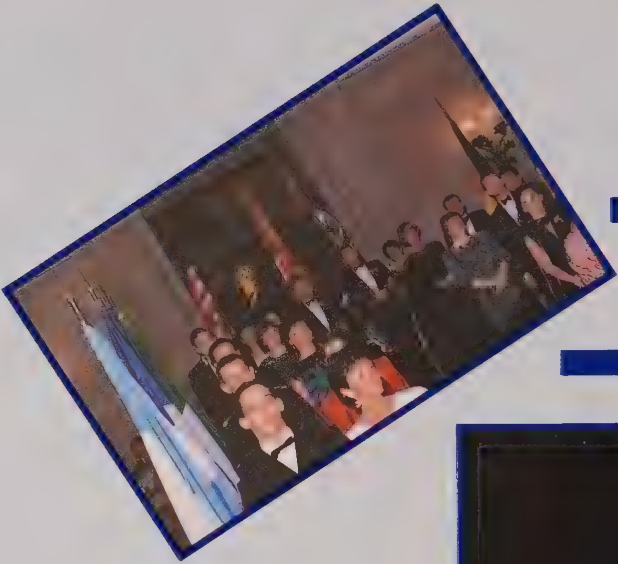
MAGNUM

Never before has the Naval Academy been so excited by an alumnus homecoming; but when Tom Selleck, a supposed member of the USNA class of '68, brought the filming of his last episode to USNA, midshipmen and Annapolitans went wild. One would think this excitment drew from the female members of the Brigade only. (Not so, only James Webb gets that kind of attention!) No, the Hollywood hunk aroused the interest of everyone in the Yard. Midshipmen lined Stribling Walk and the Chapel steps for hours in order to get a glimpse of Magnum. Although midshipmen were officially required to attend all scheduled classes, many profs neglected to take attendance, since they themselves could be found somewhere along Stribling Walk.

Following all the attention his T-Court walk through created, Selleck enjoyed the company of 4500 midshipmen for lunch in King Hall. The volleyball team presented Mr. Selleck with a volleyball to commemorate the work he has done for the U.S. Olympic team. No one enjoyed Selleck's visit as much as the Protocol officer, Lt. Liggett, who was caught smooching Magnum in the Wardroom. Is that proper protocol, ma'am? The enthusiasm of the day of filming was matched by the actual showing of the much-heralded last episode. All company wardrooms were packed with mids hoping to get a glimpse of themselves walking through T-Court.





INT'L BALL

Twenty-two years ago, a tradition began at the Naval Academy. The idea, conceived by Professor Tolstoy, was to invite the daughters, sons, and friends of foreign dignitaries, as well as international students from the D.C./Annapolis area, to an evening of pageantry at the Naval Academy. In addition to showing our international guests a good time, the International Ball was designed to honor our own foreign exchange officers.

Midshipmen joined enthusiastically in the planning; the committee was headed by Midshipman First Class Laura Stroman. All upperclass mids were invited to attend the International Ball, which was held on Saturday, 26 March 1988. Many midshipmen escorted the foreign guests to an exclusive reception that preceded the dance. The evening was a stimulating one; midshipmen were afforded the opportunity to meet other young people of very different cultures. A few brave mids practiced their foreign language training on the accomodating guests.

100'S NIGHT

On Hundred's Night the most "popular" firsties were braced up and rigged, in a celestial fixes, standing on one leg, reciting the Laws of the Navy, backwards. The usual "orderliness" of Bancroft was cast aside for the tradition of role reversal between the plebes and firsties. It was amazing how two or three little gold bars on a collar could transform a mild-mannered fourth class into a fire-breathing maniac out for blood. Even the screen who could not remember what CIWS stood for did not forget which firstie flamed on him during plebe summer.

Reality set in for '88, as the impact of only one hundred days finally hit home. Being a plebe again provoked reminiscing over the years gone by, and the ever popular phrase "when I was a plebe" was thrown around more than anyone would like to hear. But, alas, all good things must come to an end. The brief two hours of 'vator privileges, going to Steerage, and "bee-bopping" in the halls without a cover ended as quickly as they began. Study hour returned the Hall to relative normalcy.

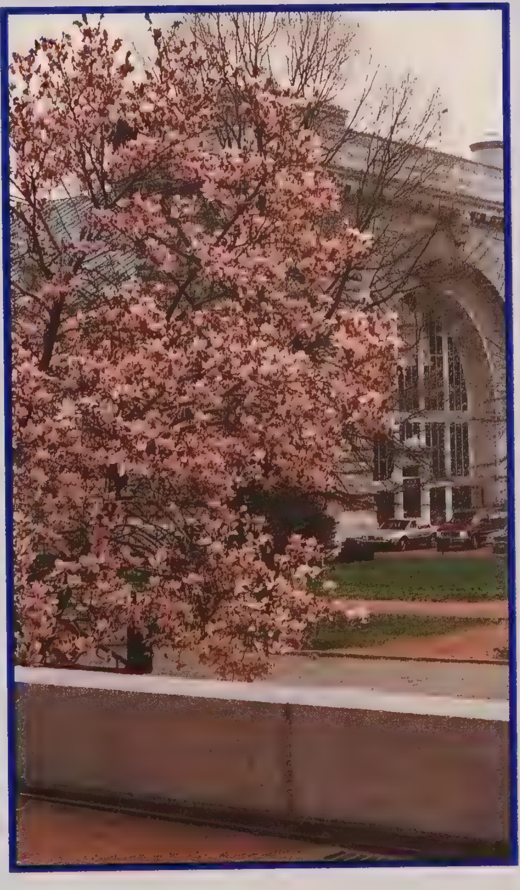
SPRING



SPRING DRILL

Springtime at the Naval Academy provided long-awaited relief from the Dark Age Blues. The explosion of color in the Yard and the expectation of spring leave lifted the spirits of the Brigade. Unfortunately, though, every silver lining has a cloud; in the case of spring, the cloud was SPRING DRILL. Once again, Worden Field echoed with commands: Present Arms! Order Arms! Forward March! Parade Rest! (Not necessarily in that order.) Platoon drill competition was first on the drill agenda. One hundred and eight platoons competed fiercely and hoped that the random number generator put them in the top fifty, at least.

The fun didn't stop there, though. As soon as the platoon competition was over, company drill began. Spring parades provided midshipmen with yet another opportunity to excel on the drill field. The mission of the Brigade was to impress the tourists and to survive the critical eye of the Drill God, CAPT M. Shupp.

ACTIVITIES CENTER

It was early in the winter of 1987 when the Brigade first noticed that there was something going on in the area behind Mahan Hall by College Creek. Contrary to the belief of some, no one had made a gigantic mistake and started building the rumored ninth and tenth wings of Mother "B." Rather, it was the beginnings of the new Brigade Activities Center. Finally, the Brigade was to have a real auditorium where every mid could sit, in comfort, for a Forrestal Lecture or to watch a basketball game. Upon completion, there will be no more long rows of gray chairs set up in Halsey Field House. All through the spring, the "Clank! Clank!" of hundreds of concrete beams being driven into the ground was a constant reminder of the work going on to complete the newest building in the Yard, the Brigade Activities Center.

DININGS-IN

Dinings-In were golden opportunities for midshipmen to develop proper etiquette and poise on the social scene. The gourmet meals were always a delight, with filet mignon, green beans almondine, baked potatoes and sour cream, and fresh chocolate mousse for dessert. As wine connoisseurs in training, mids learned that Port goes with everything! The numerous bottles of red and white wines offered an occasion for midshipmen to display their unquestionable ability to drink responsibly.

Guest speakers highlighted the evening with witty rhetoric covering various topics, like leadership and professionalism. Then . . . the GROG! was awarded to the unfortunate clods who dared to wear unreg suspenders or just could not seem to keep their elbows off the table. To top off the evening, toasts were proposed for every reason from honoring the Navy and Marine Corps to just getting in a dig at a company-mate (company officers were also fair game at this point). All in all, dinings-in were good opportunities for everyone to kick back and relax.

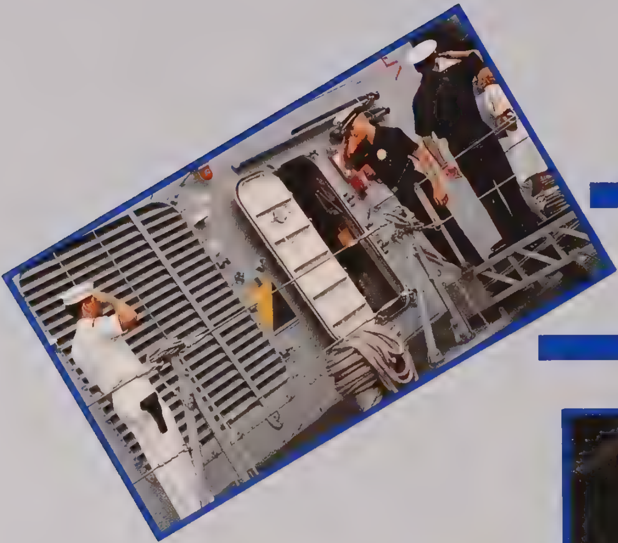
MARINE CORPS MESS NIGHT

The new Commandant of the Marine Corps, General Gray, came to the Academy for the Marine Corps Mess Night, the likes of which haven't been seen for a long time. Colonel Fagan, who was attending his first mess night as senior Marine Corps officer at the Academy, and the Semper Fi club made sure that the General and all involved had a grand time. The drinks flowed freely from the beginning of the evening in Dalghren Hall. The General talked with mids and Academy officers during the reception, and then the group headed over to Smoke Hall for dinner. After a fine meal, the Commandant had the honor of lighting the smoking lamp and addressing the gathered Marine and Naval officers and midshipmen. Afterwards, the General was presented with an authentic Naval Academy B-robe.

SPRING FORMAL

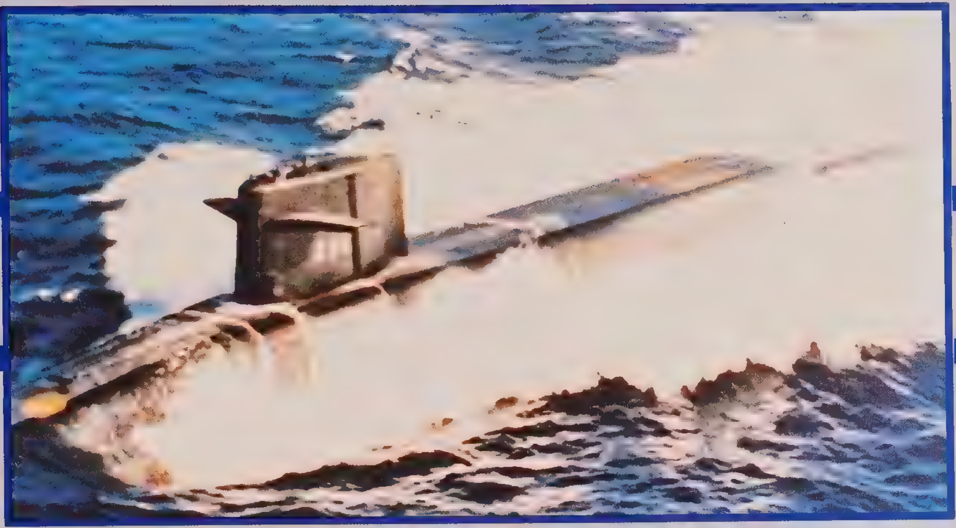
As life emerged from the thawing ground in the Academy flowerbeds, the mids, too, awakened from the Dark Age Doze. Those who braved a chilly wind sought a tan on fifth and sixth wing red beaches. Cinderella libs gave firsties a hint of long-awaited independence. From midshipmen in all classes came the undeniable signs of spring — plebes were tired of the routine, second class became more and more apathetic, youngsters made "flaming faces" in the mirror, and firsties were "just puttin' in time."

Of course, with spring came opportunities for romance, and what could be more romantic than a midshipman and date at the annual Spring Formal. Dahlgren Hall's ice skating rink was transformed into a stage and dance floor — a floor filled with sharp looking young couples in mess dress and flowery skirts of every shade. Dates flooded in from every corner of the country, not to mention colleges and high schools right in Annapolis. Dinner in town, perhaps at the Charthouse, and a night of dancing, both fast and slow, proved to be a splendid time for all.



SHIPS IN THE YARD

Throughout the year, the Severn River and the Chesapeake Bay have the opportunity to hold in their waters Navy ships. Although Annapolis does have a naval base, it is not the home port for any class of navy ship. It is, however, the home of the small yard patrol boats on which midshipmen are given practical seamanship training. So when a navy captain decides to bring his ship into Annapolis, his crew, the town, and the midshipmen benefit from this port call. While the crew of the ship enjoy liberty in Annapolis, midshipmen and tourists are awarded the chance to visit the navy ship. For each plebe, however, this is a mandatory professional obligation. As they study about the ships in their professional manuals, they have the opportunity to learn about the ship more extensively by seeing it first hand. One from each of the following classes of ships and submarines was present this year: Ticonderoga, Permit, Spruance, Oliver Hazard Perry, Los Angeles, and Pegasus class.

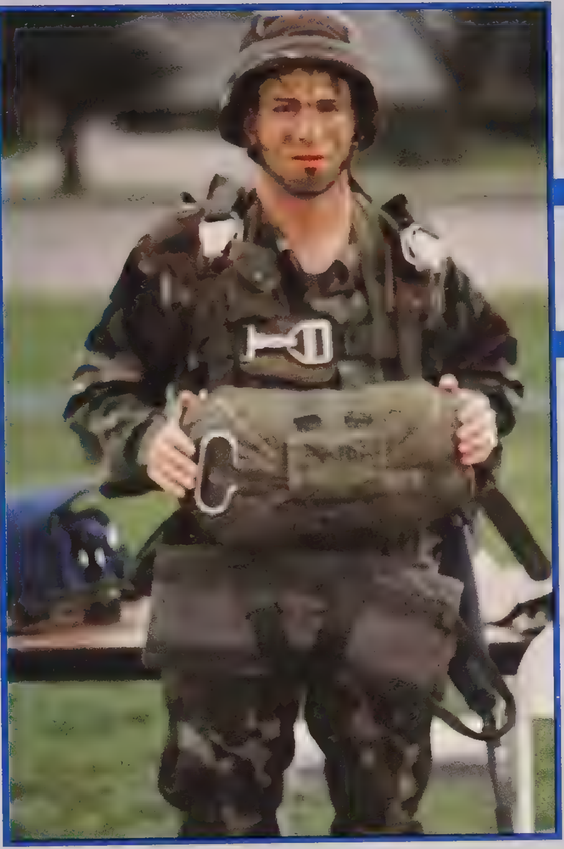


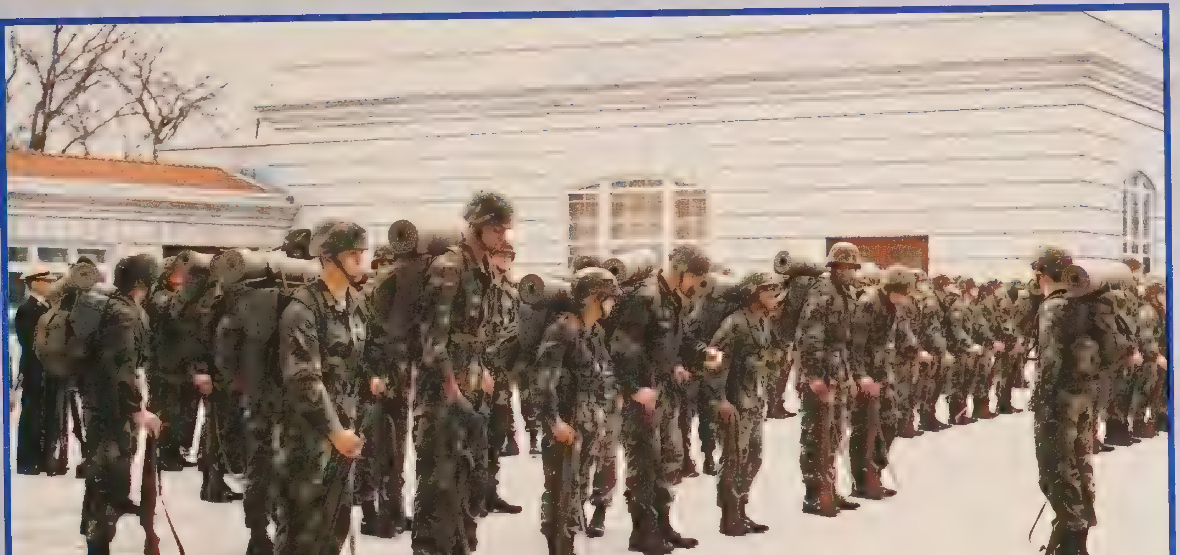
BULLDOG

The Class of '89 Marine Corps hopefuls were the first to experience Bulldog. Bulldog is a precommissioning course, a mini basic school course, to prove a person is committed to the Corps. Early second semester the Class of '89 midshipman who were pondering a career in the Marine Corps started training for the six week long summer course.

Pre-Bulldog consisted of afternoons of physical fitness training, Wednesday evening classes, and a three-day field excercise at Fort Meade. The mids were taught how to write Marine Corps five Paragraph orders, field strip M-16s, and they also learned about Marine Corps history and tradition.

The training of these Midshipmen while at the Academy was intended to aid them in the tough Bulldog course at Quantico.





SPECIAL OLYMPICS

1988 was not only an Olympic year for the world but for the Naval Academy as well, as the Special Olympics came to both Lejeune Hall and Ingram Field one weekend in the spring. The first day was filled with swimming events in Lejeune as the Olympians competed in the full spectrum of water races. The spectators and huggers cheered them all on to victory, in the truest sense of the word. The next day was a beautiful Annapolis spring day and the Olympics moved outside to Ingram Field where the track and field events took place. Mid and civilian volunteer huggers again cheered each finisher and ran laps with them, while in the infield there was time for talk — and maybe even a little football.

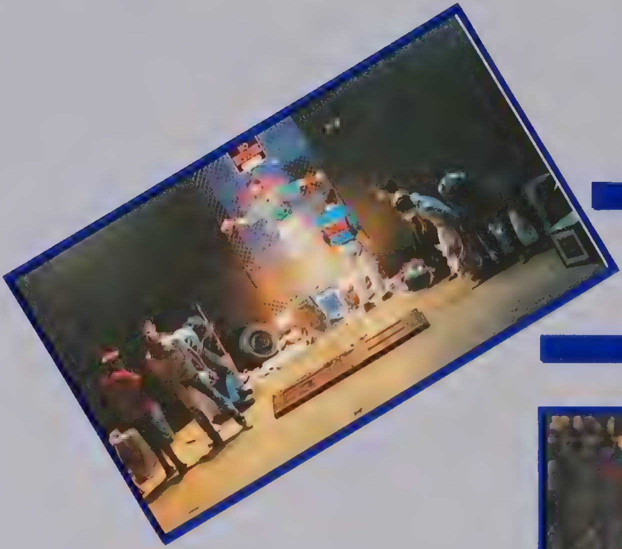
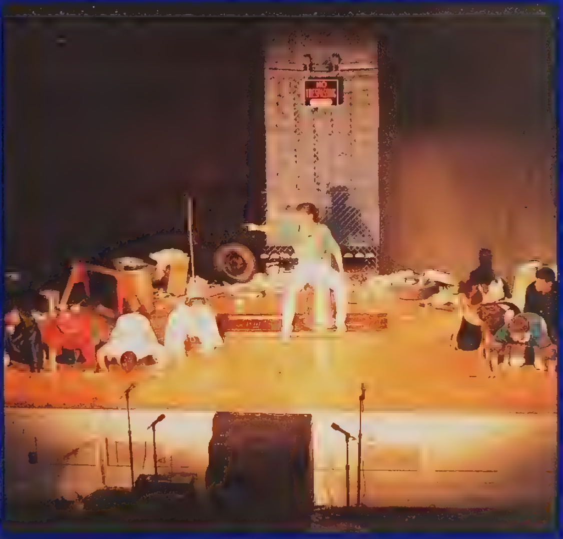
NAFAC

Once again college students fron all across the country, and some from across the oceans, converged on the United States Naval Academy in the spring to discuss foreign affairs. The reason they all came together was NAFAC, or the Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference. For three days the nearly 200 delegates discussed, argued, and contemplated every angle of the 1988 NAFAC topic; "Solving Today's Tensions for Tomorrow's Peace." And if that weren't enough, numerous VIP's from all areas of business, politics, and academia were present to give lectures or take part in a debate on the topic. Midshipman Will Burkhart, '88, did a great job running the conference smoothly. To the other mids involved, NAFAC, otherwise known as Not Accountable For Any Classes, was a super way to enjoy a week with other college students. The class option and nightly O-Club libs weren't bad, either.



GODSPELL

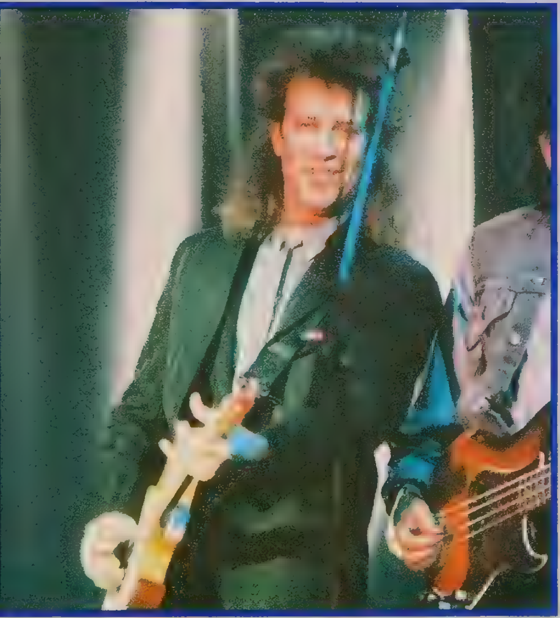
The Masqueraders put on an unprecedented second play for the spring of 1988. Following the successful production of the Rogers and Hammerstein classic "The King and I," the players regrouped for a performance of "Godspell." Through many hours of hard work and practice, the cast of only eleven formed a close-knit group. The closeness that formed within the cast aided in communicating to the audience the spectrum of emotions involved in any rendition of "Godspell." The play was both delightful and heartbreaking in its account of the teachings, life, and death of Jesus Christ. The Masqueraders provided a touching and entertaining performance for Naval Academy audiences.

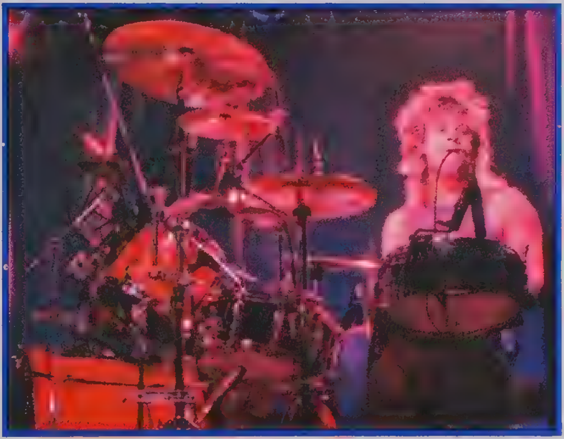


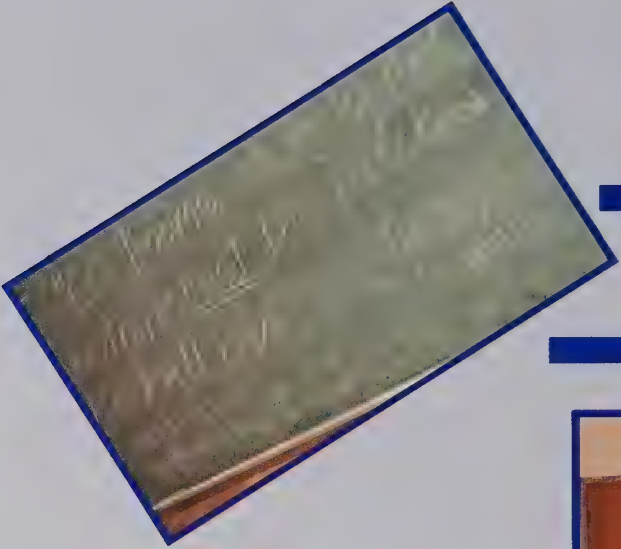
HOOTERS

The rock band "the Hooters" came to Halsey Field House in the spring of 1988 and rocked a near-capacity crowd well into the night. After the Baltimore band the Del Lords warmed up the crowd, the Hooters came on stage and put on quite a show. The four men from the City of Brotherly Love played their mega-hits "Where Do the Children Go" and "We Danced" from their first album "Nervous Night," and the crowd loved it. The Hooters didn't miss a beat as they then moved right into songs like the hit "Johnny B." off their new album.

The band played with and to the crowd on numerous occasions and, of course, played the encores when it was obvious that the crowd wouldn't leave until they heard them. It must have been strange for the band to look out over the large crowd and see so many black coats and ties. Unfortunately, the uniforms were a reminder of the the finals coming up in a week that left many Mids wondering "Where Did the Grades Go?"







MOVING OUT

As summer neared, and the end became closer than "distant future," the minds of midshipmen turned to one thing . . . getting out. It was again time to move a year's accumulation of things — living and dead — elsewhere. There seemed to be more uniforms, more books no one would buy, and more clothes with other mids' alpha codes on them, than ever before. May 1988 — purloined laundry carts rumbled down the hallways laden with computers, stereos, civilian clothes, and other items (uniforms?). It was a hectic fight to beat the deadlines of company officers to move out or be . . .

The plebes chopped around in search of new company lockers, while upperclass just ran for the nearest trashbin. The firsties made moving out the most fun, because it was their last time. Their best things were packed into boxes that got in everyone's way, and their worst were strewn about the basement for the wayward janitor or the willing mid to pick up. Midshipmen groaned at moving time because storage space was not as prolific as junk to be stored. But the emphasis on moving was MOVING OUT; mids began to realize that, for a short respite, it was OVER.

DEDICATION PARADE

The Dedication Parade marked the beginning of the end for the Class of 1988. They had been counting "lasts" for the past semester — last Spring Break, last O Course, last Monday of classes, last class, last exam . . . Then finally, after all those lasts, '88 realized that they were about to experience another "last" — their last June Week. Families began to arrive, and on Friday, 20 May 1988, the Class of 1988 participated in their last Dedication Parade.

The rain held off only long enough to ensure that the ceremony would not be cancelled at the last moment. After the midshipmen were all on the field, a steady downpour began that would last the entire duration of the parade. The rain, though, did not seem to dampen the spirits of those in attendance (at least the mids found it fairly amusing). In any case, the purpose of the Dedication Parade was not forgotten, and the faculty members of the Naval Academy braved the foul weather to receive tribute for their service. The faculty honored included those professors who were retiring and those who had served faithfully for twenty, forty, or forty-five years at the Academy. Four instructors received special recognition: the Alumni Association Research Excellence Award was received by Professor John J. Fontanella and Associate Professor Mary C. Wintergill (both from the Physics Department), the Alumni Association Teaching Excellence Award went to Professor Craig L. Symonds (History Department), and the William P. Clements Award went to Captain John K. Kruse, Jr., USMC (Political Science Department).

HERNDON

The monument is 21 feet tall, and it was covered with about 200 pounds of lard, courtesy of the Class of '90. When the cannon fired, Herndon was rushed by over a thousand plebes. The plebes were cheered on by the upperclass, whose liberty depended on famous cover switch. This year, the upperclass didn't have to wait very long — in just 43 minutes, 44 seconds, the Class of 1991, led by Mel Davis of Tenth Company, had achieved their goal. According to legend, Midn Davis will become the first member of his class to become an admiral.

The Class of 1991, although they did not come close to '72's record-setting mark of 1 minute, 30 seconds, were proud to record the fastest time of any of the four classes at the Academy. Members of the Class of 1988, on the other hand, were glad that their own record would hold for another year — '88 holds the record for being the slowest of all the classes of plebes who have climbed Herndon, with a time of 3 hours, 12 minutes, 23 seconds.

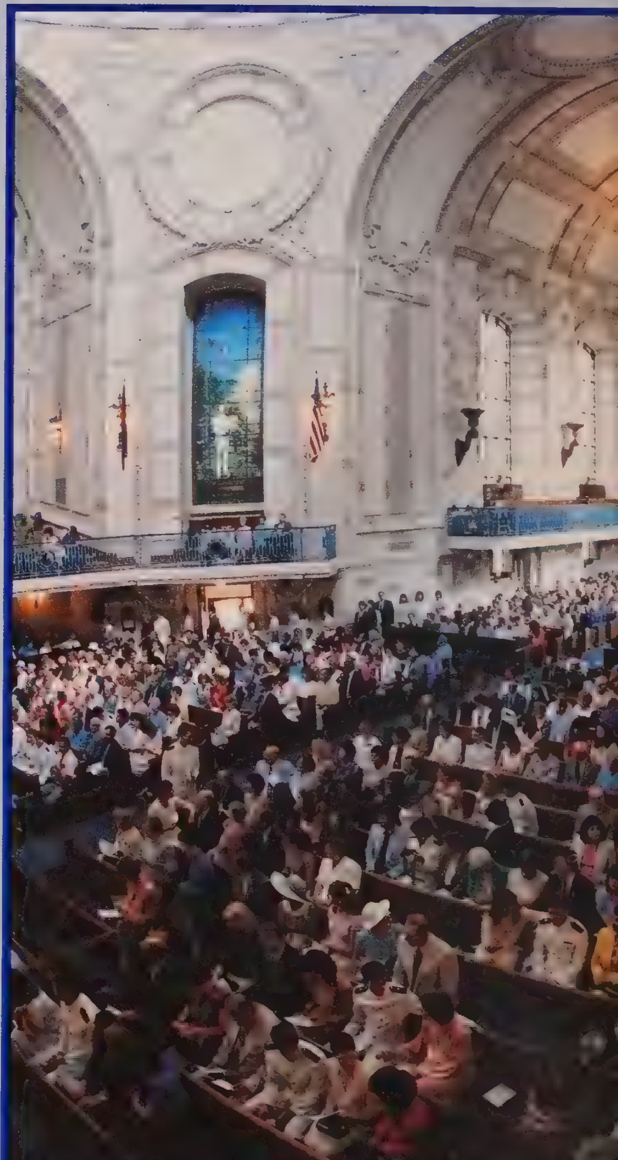
RING DANCE

Most of the activities of June Week were geared toward the graduating class: special King Hall dinners, Superintendent's Receptions, the Farewell Ball, etc. However, on Saturday night, the spotlight turned to the Class of 1989, as they donned dinner dress whites and attended the Ring Dance. The second class had looked forward to the evening ever since they had ordered their rings as youngsters. The quest for a date had started early in the year; for some, the choice was made early, but others agonized until a few days before the event.

Finally, after much preparation and anticipation, the big night arrived. The midshipman's date wore the all-important ring suspended on a blue ribbon around the neck or pinned to the lapel. The ring was dipped in a binnacle containing water from the seven seas, which symbolized the travel that lies ahead of midshipmen. Then the couple entered a large gold replica of the class ring, where the ring was placed on the midshipman's finger. The ceremony was sealed with a kiss.

BACCALAUREATE



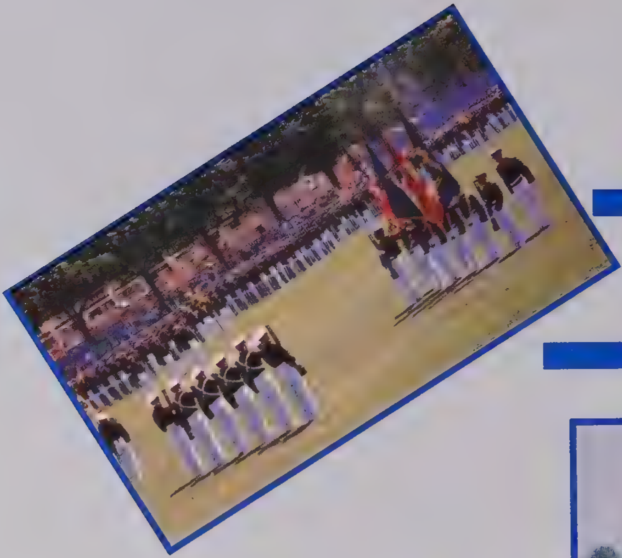
SUPT'S RECEPTION

Commissioning Week was a busy round of social activities. The Yard was buzzing with parents and friends of graduating midshipmen, and they all wanted to experience as much of the Academy as possible. This included meeting the "big stripes" that are such an important part of the institution. During the Superintendent's Reception, parents received their chance to speak with the highest ranking officer of the Naval Academy, Rear Admiral Ronald F. Marryott. Midshipmen and their families waited in a line that sometimes stretched around the corner, in order to pass through the receiving line. The wait was worth it, though, since the weather, which was pleasant on both afternoons, made the garden of the Buchanan House especially pleasant. The refreshments were bountiful, and the company was distinguished — all of the Superintendent's guests were impressed.

BLUE ANGELS

On Monday afternoon the seawall and all the playing fields of the Academy were packed with excited spectators of all ages. The Severn River was shore-to-shore boats, from the smallest dinghy or knock-about to YPs and yawls. From the first time the engines were heard to the last sight of the planes, the crowd was enthralled. They grew accustomed to the noise, and to the announcer's words, "And now, from your left . . . THE BLUE ANGELS!!"

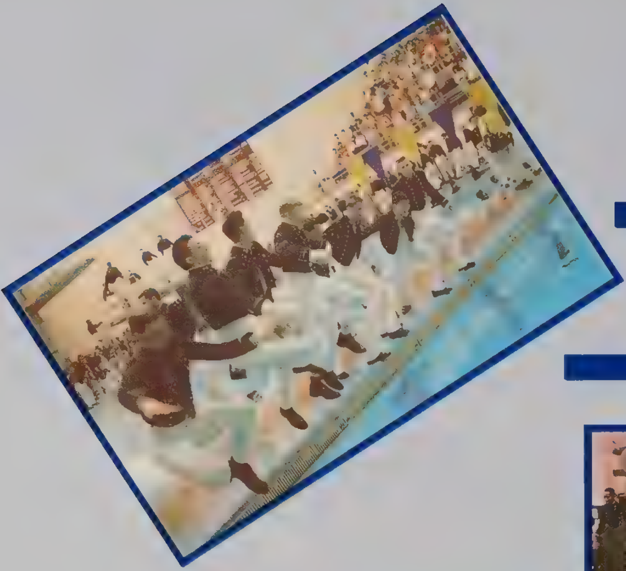
The Blue Angels, known officially as the U.S. Navy Fight Demonstration Squadron, have performed their precision flying demonstrations for more than 186 million spectators. They have been performing during Commissioning Week for more than thirty years. Although the individual maneuvers performed by the team are those taught to every prospective Naval and Marine Corps aviator during flight training, the show has evolved thoughout the years, since the first team was organized in 1946, to become the epitome of aerial artistry. The tight diamond formation has become the trademark of the Blue Angels.



COLOR PARADE

The color parade was the most widely attended of all of the brigade's dress parades. For many parents and friends of the Class of 1988, it was the only opportunity they had to see "their" midshipmen on the parade field. The weather was warm and sunny (hot enough to keep the corpsmen fairly busy). The highlight of the event was the formal presentation of the colors to Sixteenth Company, which by virtue of its excellence during the entire year of competition, won the honor of being designated color company. Sixteenth Company will carry the colors for all events until Commissioning Week in 1989.

The Color Girl, Susan G. Robertson of Anaheim, California, was chosen by the color company commander, Dennis J. McKelvey.



COOLING OFF

The last parade. It was over . . . and the first class celebrated. There weren't any days left to countdown — just a wake-up remained, and the countdown changed to hours. After four long years, it had come down to one last dress parade, and then — what better way to cool off than to "take a dip" in the Lejuene Hall pool? A brave few headed for the fountain on the Michelson-Chauvenet terrace or — gasp! — the Severn River.

It had been a week of receptions, parties, dances, and dinners, accompanied by ceremonies and parades, pomp and pageantry. There was only one more ceremony left — graduation. On Tuesday, relief and anticipation were showing on the faces of the first class.

It was a cold, cloudy morning. Main office received phone calls from scores of confused people: "So is it inside or outside?" The decision had been made at dawn, and the ceremony would be held outside. Those who attended would later ponder on how the decision had been made. Wishful thinking, perhaps? In any case, the firsties were happy that all their guests could attend the ceremony. For the first hour or so, enthusiasm kept the graduating class warm, but the weather worsened throughout the ceremony. A steady downpouring of rain and cold gusts of wind made the firsties' teeth chatter. "The first thing I'm going to do as an ensign is take a long, hot shower," muttered one shivering member of the Class of '88. Cold rain, though, couldn't dampen the spirits of the soon-to-be-commissioned officers. The graduating class may have been soaked when they took their oath of office, but their smiles were as wide as ever when the covers went up.

One thousand and forty one members of the Class of 1988 graduated on 25 May 1988. Of those, 855 became ensigns, 174 went Marine Corps, and 5 were commissioned in the Air Force (7 were foreign citizens). This was the 138th graduation of midshipmen.

Corporate Research And Development

The Most Advanced Propulsion And Generator Systems

Advanced technology. It drives GE. It drives engineers. It fuels their imagination. It fosters the best products. It's the cornerstone upon which future systems are built. Sharing advanced technology for use in other applications is a way of life for GE engineers who can draw from numerous Company resources. Resources like Corporate Research And Development which investigates metallurgy, fluid flow, insulation properties, noise abatement, advanced diagnostics and other fields critical to the Navy. Resources like Drive Systems which offers advanced silicon-controlled rectifier power conversion techniques that improve performance and operational flexibility by simplifying the entire electrical system of the ship. Resources like Simulation And Control Systems which provides advanced digital controls to the Navy, including new Arleigh Burke Class DDG destroyers. Resources like the Aircraft Engine Business Group which brings its expertise in aircraft-derivative gas turbine propulsion systems to Navy surface ships. Resources like various laboratories of the Turbine Business Operations which improve the efficiency of rotating equipment and lead to breakthroughs such as smaller, lighter, quieter, hardened and ground gears. All of these resources work in cooperation with Naval & Drive Turbine Systems which is chartered to coordinate the design, manufacture and test of the most advanced U.S. Navy propulsion and ships service turbine generator systems.

Technological Transfer, Solutions And Success

Continuous technological transfer is the reason GE is the leading supplier of these systems to the fleet from the largest aircraft carriers to the smallest auxiliary ships. It's part of a Proud Tradition that lets our engineers build-on a record of over 75 years of propulsion experience and over a century of power generation experience. It's the reason GE is aboard SSN-688 attack submarines, SSBN-726 Tridents and is pioneering next-generation SSN-21 systems. It's the

nology Of A $40 Billion Company
One Of Them.

Propulsion And Auxiliary Systems

reason GE propels CVN carriers, provides advanced hardened and ground gears for DDG destroyers, supplies turbine generator sets for LHD amphibians and produces shock-qualified electronic governors for CGN cruisers. It's the reason GE is exploring electric drives for SWATH prototypes and developing the lightest, quietest, smallest, highest-power-density ships service turbine generator systems.

A Firm Commitment To Integrated Systems

Fully-integrated, factory-tested systems. They're required by the Navy. They come from the experience of supplying more Marine and Navy systems than any other company. They come from careful attention to detail with disciplines such as finite element analysis which is used to check and recheck each component before assembly and test as an integrated system. They come from the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars in modern facilities. Facilities that permit computer-aided design. Facilities that permit computer-aided manufacture such as numerically-controlled machining centers to assure the highest level of accuracy and repeatability for every component. Facilities that permit entire systems to be full-load tested while on-line results are monitored by computer-aided data acquisition techniques and fiber optic sensors. After shipment, total systems support is continued by GE service engineers, who are on-call to provide installation, maintenance, overhaul and training at ports around the world.

Leadership—A Proud Tradition Continues

Leadership is the reward of advanced technology. It's achieved through the on-going pursuit of engineering excellence. GE Navy engineers know this well as they combine their talent with the total resources of the Company to advance the U.S. Navy mission into the 21st Century. Teamed for AEGIS firepower: FMC's Naval Systems Division.

Two major weapons aboard AEGIS cruisers are Mk 41 vertical launching system and Mk 45 lightweight gun. The multi-mission Mk 41 offers selective launching of missiles against air, surface and submarine threats, as well as land attack. For closer range, Mk 45 offers selective firing of all types of 5-inch ammunition. Both of these highly automated AEGIS weapon systems are produced by FMC's Naval Systems Division.

We build them.

The advanced technologies applied today in sophisticated shipboard systems require even greater sophistication in manufacture. Without question, FMC's Naval Systems Division. operates one of the largest, most advanced facilities in the world for design, development and production of naval armament. Our Mk 41 and missile canister production alone requires nearly 300,000 sq. ft. of dedicated high-tech facilities.

We support them.

Wherever you find an FMC-built weapon system, you'll find us providing fully integrated logistics support. This includes shipyard technical installation assistance, provisioning, spares, field service and the latest in simulation training systems.

We've got the team for AEGIS firepower. Full capability and commitment to produce the finest systems on time, on budget, with full support anywhere in the world. FMC Corporation, Naval Systems Division, Box 59043, 4800 East River Road, Minneapolis, MN 55459-0043.

MARINE TRANS PORT LINES

America is beginning to realize that its military readiness around the globe depends not just on the regular armed forces, but also on the strength of the United States-flag merchant fleet.

After all, without a healthy and active commercial fleet to support U.S. troops during wars or other conflicts, America's military operations overseas would be left high and dry.

And ever since the early days of the republic, generations of brave and patriotic Americans have valiantly supported their country in wartime by sailing with the merchant marine.

Today, the licensed and unlicensed members of District No. 1-MEBA/NMU carry on that proud tradition as partners with the industry in making the United States merchant marine strong during peacetime.

As the most valued members of the U.S.-flag commercial and government fleets, they are an elite corps of highly skilled merchant seamen who have proven time and time again the meaning of the words expertise, dependability and pride.

It's a tradition that's been handed down since the founding of the National MEBA in 1875.

Our "All-Risk" Personal Property Insurance for Cadets/Midshipmen is

10 WAYS BETTER

than other "All-Risk" coverage for Academy Students

Here are just 4 examples

LOSS OR THEFT OF JEWELRY, WATCHES, FURS

Our policy pays up to $250 per item and, at no added cost, higher limits if you list (schedule) property in these categories with us. Other policies normally pay only $250 for loss of any one or more items in the above grouping. With other companies, higher limits require a separate policy at added cost. Note: The method of insuring service academy, university or college graduation rings may differ from insurer to insurer.

LOSS OR THEFT OF CASH

Our policy pays up to $250. With other policies, the limit usually is only $100.

TOTAL AMOUNT OF COVERAGE YOU CAN BUY

You can buy as much coverage as you want from us. Other unscheduled "all-risk" coverage offered to cadets and midshipmen is usually limited to $3,000.

LENGTH OF TIME YOU CAN KEEP COVERAGE

Our policy not only gives you "all-risk" protection for your property while you are a cadet or midshipman, but also throughout your service career. Your commissioning does not require you to take any action to continue your coverage. Others may require you to take out a new policy, at new rates, at the first policy renewal after graduation.

The
of Sea Power
upon History
1660–1783

First came the influence of sea power upon history. Now comes the influence of technology upon sea power.

Admiral Alfred Thayer Mahan (1840-1914). A brilliant strategist, whose writings first defined the importance of sea power in the modern world.

It is a tribute to Mahan that his ideas still live, not only in navy tradition and history, but also in the minds of those who will help build tomorrow's navies.

At Autonetics Marine Systems Division, we appreciate the importance of sea power. That's why we're so proud of the technologies we're developing for the U.S. Navy. Our precision navigation and control systems. Our cost-effective shipboard information management. And our innovative undersea warfare programs.

We'd like to tell you more about our commitment to sea power. Write or call Autonetics Marine Systems Division (DA41), 3370 Miraloma Avenue, Anaheim, CA 92803, (714) 762-7775. And be sure to ask for a copy of this specially commissioned portrait of Admiral Mahan.

Better training; faster training; more cost-effective training; that's what's needed right now to help make the most of every defense dollar. And that's exactly what the T45 Training System's set to deliver for the Navy.

Developed to train tomorrow's pilots to higher standards in fewer flying hours, T45TS combines flight simulation and computer-based academics with practical instruction in the T-45A Goshawk, a new, versatile trainer developed from the highly successful British Aerospace Hawk.

Whether flying off a runway or a carrier deck, no trainer demands more of its pilot to help him achieve the higher standards in airmanship and weapons systems management vital for tomorrow's sophisticated combat aircraft. Yet no trainer's more forgiving of mistakes made along the way.

Then add into the equation a 42% reduction in fuel use, a 46% reduction in support personnel requirements, and a need for 25% fewer flying hours, and you end up with two things.

An overall 50% saving in training costs; and a training system ideally suited for tomorrow's defense needs.

So no wonder the Navy's hooked on T45TS. It's the logical way forward into the 1990s for undergraduate jet flight training.

Boeing VERTREP.
Deck to deck in 30 seconds.

When seas are up and everything is tied down, vertical replenishment with Boeing H-46 helicopters is the only way to go. Regardless of wind direction, the H-46's unique tandem rotor design allows unmatched handling and hovering. Whether it's parts, stores or ammo, two H-46s can transfer 180 tons an hour, day or night. Deck to deck in 30 seconds!

And for unmatched mission readiness and maintenance savings, Boeing began delivering the first of 354 kits for the Navy's SR&M (Safety, Reliability and Maintainability) program in July. All kits are Boeing-built and NARF-installed. And they'll increase the H-46's mission capabilities through the year 2,000 and beyond.

HORNET TALES

"ONE PILOT, ONE PLANE."

"There are still some folks out there who think we train two pilots to fly two different Hornets—fighter pilots for the 'F-18' and attack pilots for the 'A-18.' They're completely missing the beauty of this machine for the Navy.

"This one plane flies both missions and the pilot is trained for both missions. For a squadron skipper like me, the dual role advantage means I've got a lot more capability on hand. So when I get the order for additional strike force or more combat air patrol, I can give 'em a 'yes' instead of a plea for four more hours to get some different equipment in the air.

"I led one of four squadrons of Hornets on the Coral Sea during the Libyan action. Coral's one of the smaller carriers in the fleet—too small for other fighters so they filled her up with Hornets.

"It was like this. We'd have six of 'em in the air and I get told the mission's being changed from air-to-air over to air-to-ground. I tell the guy in the sky and it's done. He's air-to-ground, just like that. We've actually changed the mission while they're flying—no other plane could do that.

"Then the situation starts gettin' real hot and they double our normal sortie rate—double it. And we do it—without the maintenance crew having a nervous breakdown.

"That ship got a new lease on life with us. Turned out '18s did most of the flying, they were so reliable.

"I tell you from personal experience, no plane can go up against the '18 for maintainability and availability. The numbers prove it. Libya proved it.

"It stays up like nothin' else. And it takes just one pilot and one plane to do jobs no other single plane can handle.

"The Hornet keeps pilots happy. It keeps the maintenance crew happy. And it makes me look good, real good."

"That ship got a new lease on life with us. Turned out '18s did most of the flying, they were so reliable."

THE F/A-18. FAMILIARITY BREEDS AWE.

The F/A-18 strike fighter is a highly effective force multiplier—one plane with one pilot capable of flying more tactical missions more effectively than any other Naval aircraft. This Hornet Tale was taken from interviews with actual F/A-18 squadron skippers. Do you have a Hornet Tale? If you'd like to tell us about it, send your name, address and phone number to: McDonnell Douglas Hornet Tales, P.O. Box 4105, Hazelwood, MO 63042. We'll send you a set of six F/A-18 "ROCKIN' AND ROLLIN'" posters and may interview you for our next Hornet Tale.

The fighter that enemy pilots fear most is now flying against Navy and Marine Corps fleet fighter air crews.

As the Free World's hottest single-engine, multirole fighter, the F-16 is the best aircraft to realistically simulate the enemy's most advanced tactics. That's why it now flies with the Navy's Top Gun and adversary fighter squadrons at Miramar and Key West Naval Air Stations. To challenge and hone our Navy and Marine fighter air crews' already superb flying skills.

So they can make life tougher for the enemy.

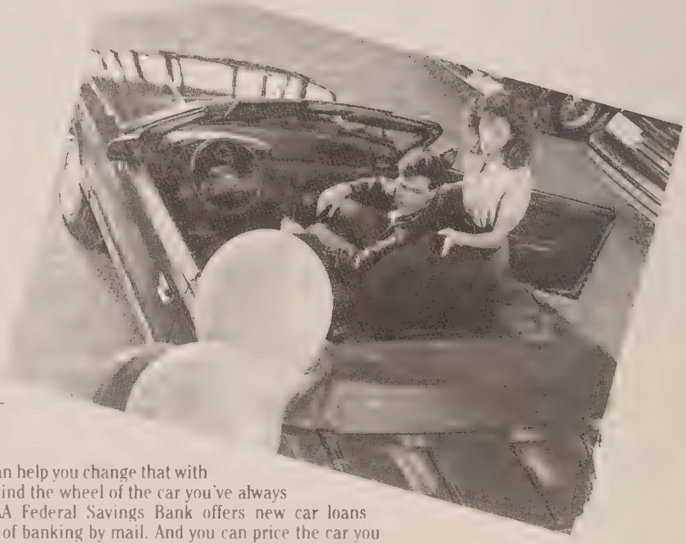
Expectations and reward...

USAA makes it possible with a lifetime of service.

Sometimes the car you want isn't the car you get. You may be put off by the purchase price or the availability of the model.



The USAA family of companies can help you change that with services designed to put you behind the wheel of the car you've always wanted. For example, the USAA Federal Savings Bank offers new car loans combined with the convenience of banking by mail. And you can price the car you want, buy it or lease it at substantial savings, and then cover it with an extended service contract all through the USAA Buying Service

Of course USAA has been in the business of providing outstanding value and service in auto insurance since 1922. That tradition continues today with all of our products and services.

So whether it's your first car or your fifth, USAA is there with the products and services you need.

Call us today—1-800-531-8018.
A Lifetime of Service at Your Command.

The future belongs to those who shape it.

A salute to the U.S. Naval Academy graduates as you make your plans for the future. From Bell Helicopter — a company that's been planning the future for many years.

With developments like the TiltRotor — an aircraft that will take off, maneuver and land like a helicopter, yet tilts its big turbine engines forward to dash at speeds up to 300 knots.

Our tiltrotor technology has set the stage for the V-22 Osprey — a larger, more powerful TiltRotor under development by Bell Boeing for every major branch of the U.S. armed services.

With the V-22 Osprey, an extraordinary new age in aviation technology begins, proving once again that the future belongs to those who shape it.

The future is ours by design.

Avondale draws on its past to fabricate America's future.

When heavy industry was being written off as passé in America, the executive team of Avondale Industries, Inc., went quietly about the business of securing a bright future in heavy, industrial manufacturing.

Avondale first strengthened its traditional leadership position as the nation's finest marine fabricator by adopting the leading edge technology…modular construction and assembly.

Avondale mastered the technology and then sought ways to maximize its value, applying it successfully to diverse land-based industries.

Today, heavy industry is back in style because critical systems for transportation, defense, electric power and environmental protection need upgrading and expanding…now.

Because of extraordinary foresight and aggressive action, Avondale today provides components and complete facilities to upgrade the country's infrastructure quickly and inexpensively.

Avondale is refabricating America.

PERSIAN GULF, OCTOBER 21st 1987. CONVOY NO.12.

THE US NAVY AT

"We have such a proliferation of military ships here right now. It's a little bit like operating in the Mediterranean during a NATO exercise. We keep a 'Jane's Fighting Ships' up here on the bridge—all my lookouts can recognize the ships."

US Navy ship's officer in the Persian Gulf, quoted in Christian Science Monitor, July 23 1987

Where do you turn when you need reliable, accurate information on the world's naval forces? There is, and always has been, only one source.

JANE'S FIGHTING SHIPS

Why is Jane's Fighting Ships 1988-89 so indispensable?

Because in its pages are the hard facts that make it a source that can be relied upon for everything you need to know about the world's 153 navies (and naval controlled coastguards). Information that has been gathered from around the world by the Jane's information organization, written and edited by an expert team under a former serving naval officer Capt. Richard Sharpe RN., and interpreted in the world-famous Foreword for which the publication is renowned. In the naval world Jane's Fighting Ships is unique.

Using text, specification lists, photographs, line drawings and indexes, Jane's Fighting Ships 1988-89 gives you all the facts on:

- NAVIES — executive offices, HQ appointments, diplomatic representatives, personnel (numbers of serving and reserves), financial estimates, naval bases, shore establishments, naval shipyards, naval aviation, strengths of fleets, naval procurement/modernization, deletions, pennant lists of national navies (with class and name of ship)
- SHIPS — classes (battleships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, frigates, submarines, corvettes, mine warfare, light forces, amphibious, service forces, training, auxiliaries, etc)
- SHIP SYSTEMS AND SPECIFICATIONS — missiles—e.g. type, guidance system, range, speed, warheads, guns—e.g. type, rate of fire, range, torpedoes, countermeasures—decoys, ESM/ECM, fire control, radars—e.g. type, wavelength, range; sonars; helicopters; specifications (builder, dimensions, crew complement, machinery, speed, radar, comment, etc.)

Ship programs/modernization/operational details

Ship-borne and maritime aircraft—numbers/type, operational speed, service ceiling, range, role/weapons systems

Jane's Fighting Ships 1988-89 has been written and compiled by an internationally renowned team of contributors under the editorial direction of Captain Richard Sharpe RN, who has commanded nuclear and conventional submarines and a guided missile destroyer, and who has served in the UK Ministry of Defence, including Naval Intelligence.

> "Since it was first published in 1898, Jane's Fighting Ships has come to be acknowledged as the premier reference work on the world's navies. Pressed between the hard bound covers of this 800 page tome are nearly half a million individual facts on all classes of ships that make up the military fleets of all seagoing nations. For 90 years Jane's has been an indispensable sourcebook for both the naval and civilian communities"

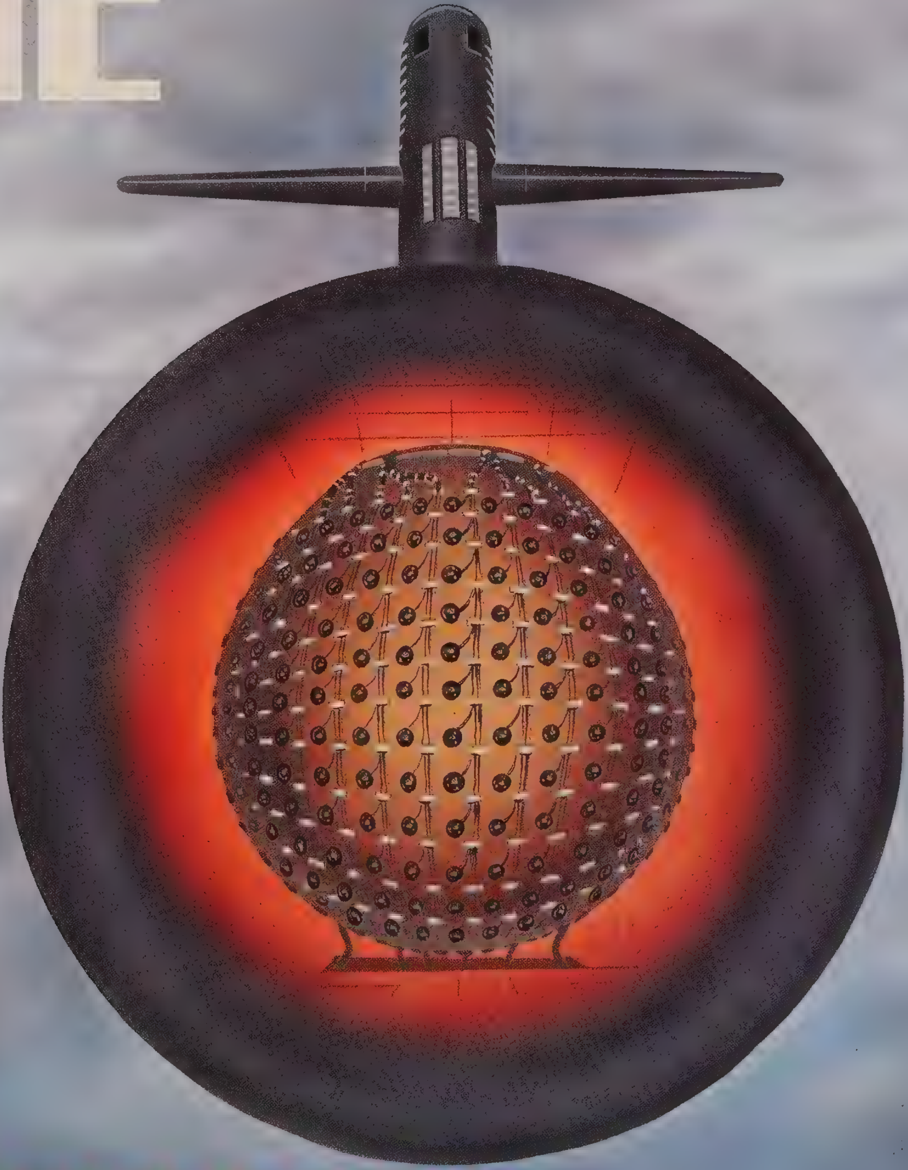
ITC



THE VISION OF TRIDENT

For over a decade International Transducer Corporation has manufactured DT-574 hydrophones for the bow sphere of the Trident submarine. These listening devices constitute the primary forward sensor for the AN/BQQ-6 Sonar System giving the Trident long range passive detection capability for all azimuths and a wide range of D/E angles. Operational performance of this sonar gives Trident outstanding acoustic vision and superior threat avoidance capability.

More than 20,000 DT-574 hydrophones have been manufactured by ITC. As a result of zero failures for installed hydrophones, excellent aging characteristics, and an indefinite shelf life, the U.S. Navy has recommended doubling the in-service operational life of the hydrophone.

This same commitment to excellence that led to the success of the DT-574 is found in all ITC transducers such as specially developed one-of-a-kind projectors or high volume production hydrophones. To apply the engineering and manufacturing expertise towards your design needs or to obtain an ITC catalog and design notes call an Applications Engineer at (805) 683-2575.
